

I operate an AM/FM combo in a very small market. The population of the two counties we serve is less than 20,000. Our listeners would never tolerate the type of verbage that seems to be commonplace in large markets. They count on us for news, weather, sports, church services, and lots of other information, including obituaries, as there is no daily newspaper within a hundred miles of us. It seems the FCC is making it extremely difficult to maintain service in these small markets. Putting in recording equipment and maintaining those records for months would be very cost-prohibitive for many of us, as well as being completely un-necessary. Please research this idea more before you create yet another financial burden for the small broadcasters of this country.
